

Attendance for week of Oct 13

During our team's meeting recording, I learned numerous things. One thing I learned was that my PowerPoint presentation was done correctly. I did the citations correctly and had access to the date where they are supposed to be. I also added differing sources which made my PowerPoint strong, and the images I used were good images. The second thing I learned was that my critique about someone else's work was good because they followed the questions in the tools of artistic critique. I didn't say the questions out loud, I answered them. I also answered the questions about what my first and second impression was and how valuable the work is. The third thing I learned was that my self critique was good because I pretended this was the first time I saw it, and pretended that it was not mine. I also did good because I talked about the terms and the tools of artistic critique in my video. The fourth thing I learned was that my skin structure turned out good. My work seems organic, and that my work seems fun. The fifth thing I learned was Carved Biomorphic Abstraction. There are two types of abstraction. The first type is straight-up abstraction, and the second type is non-abjective abstraction. Biomorphic means having to do with something organic. Morphic means change, and bio means life. This means our inspiration is organic life. In our kit, we got two blocks of foam. One bigger and the other one smaller, and you should maximize it as much as possible. The sixth thing I learned was for our project we are trying to get in the range of the presentation called Spectrum Realistic to Non Objective, we are trying to get from the top row two from the right. We still have the same organic lines as the tree but we get to the point where without being told what it is, you really don't know. You need to think of biomorphic shapes as teeth, leafs, twigs, snail shells, or the ends of bones. Look for shapes within these shapes that seem interesting, and combine them. These are the things I learned from our team's meeting recording.
